Jurnal Transformative
Critical Perspectives for Transformative Governance

Editorial News

Thankfully, Alhamdulillah, Jurnal Transformative Volume 11 Number 1 Year 2026, has been published according to schedule. In this issue, Jurnal Transformative presents five scholarly articles by authors from various institutions and countries, offering diverse perspectives on public administration, governance, democracy, digital transformation, and public service. The topics covered in this issue range from institutional transformation in government, democracy and the rule of law, digital political communication, and health system resilience to digital-based public service innovations. The diverse perspectives presented are expected to enrich the body of academic knowledge and serve as a reference for academics, practitioners, and policymakers alike.

The first article, written by Ahmad Sururi, Ieke Sartika Iriany, and Rostiena Pasciana, discusses the model for institutional transformation of the Banten Provincial Government toward the "Golden Banten 2045" vision. This article emphasizes the importance of strengthening adaptive and innovative institutions as the foundation for achieving sustainable regional development. In the second article, Valentine Flavian Ruhangisa examines the impact of post-election demonstrations following the 2025 Tanzanian General Election on the rule of law and democracy. This study provides an overview of the challenges in maintaining political stability, enforcing the law, and ensuring the quality of democracy in the post-election period.

The third article, written by Azka Abdi Amrurobbi and Alam Mahadika, examines the narrative of artificial intelligence (AI) in Gibran's political communication through a digital discourse analysis approach. This article demonstrates how technological issues are leveraged to build a leadership image and political narrative in the digital age. Meanwhile, the fourth article, written by Maricris Delos Santos, Erwin Alampay, and Ranjit Rye, discusses lessons from the Philippine healthcare system in building resilience through the strengthening of healthcare services, financing, and information systems. This article offers insights into the importance of resilient health governance in addressing crises. Finally, the fifth article, written by Satria Aji Imawan, Rico Hermawan, and Afiyanti, discusses public service innovation through the Gancang Aron Program in Banyuwangi Regency. This article explains how digital transformation can create public value through services that are more effective, innovative, and community-oriented.

We hope that the various ideas and findings published in this issue will serve as scientific references, enrich the body of research, and encourage the emergence of policy innovations capable of addressing the challenges of governance in the future.
